Our esteemed contemporary, the Burlington Hawkeye, calls our attention to the recent action of the democrats in the sixth congressional district of Mississippi, now represented by General Chalmers, a democrat, and asks us to give our opinion of the matter. eligible to the senator; or if he is, the members of the legislature under the oaths they have taken cannot elect him to that office. In the fourth section of the third article of the constitution, paragraph seven, we find this language: "Nor shall any sena "tor or representative, after his qualifica "tion as such, be elected by the genera 'assembly, or appointed by the governor either with or without the advice and consent of the senate, to any office of 'appointment, having any emolume 'annexed thereto, during the time for which he shall have been elected." We raise no point as to the eligibility authorized to issue impromptu comments of Speaker Bacon under the constitution of the United States. Possibly the stat cannot fix any other qualifications for senator than those fixed by the constitu tion of the United States. But it is very evident that the state, by its own const tution, can require an oath of the mem bers of the legislature, that they will no elect a member to the senate of the United States. Each member swears to suppor the constitution of the United States an the constitution of the state of Georgia The constitution of the state of Georgia says, after the qualification of a member that is after he has taken the oath as a member, he shall not be elected by the general assembly, or appointed by the governor, to any office or appointment having emolument annexed thereto, during the time for which he shall have been elected. The governor swears to support the stitution of the state. Suppose a vaancy should occur on the supreme bench can he appoint a member of the legislature to fill the vacancy? The constituion of the state distinctly says the member shall not be appointed during the ime for which he was elected. The governor has sworn to support that constitution. What does he do with his oath when he makes the appointment? In the case just supposed there is nothing in the constitution of the United States to prevent the governor from appointing a membe of the legislature as a judge; but the con stitution of the state prevents it; and he cannot exercise the duties of his office when he swears to support that constitution; in other words, he swears that he will not appoint a member of the legislature a judge of the courts. Just so with the members of the legislature; the con stitution of the state says a member shall not be elected by the general assembly to any office having emolument annexed to it. Each member swears that he will support that constitution. Now when a member casts his vote in an election held by the general assembly for a member of the legislature he has done all in his power to elect that member. He has exhausted the elective power, so far as he is concerned, and as far as he is able to do. If it is said he did not violate his oath, because a majority did not vote with him, and make the election, the reply is he did all he could to make it, when he had sworn he would not do it. It is very clear that a majority of the members of the legislature could not elect a member of their own body to the office of United States senator or judge, without a violation of their oaths to support the constitution of the state, which says expressly it shall not be done. stance and the balance going towards the have been beating their little war-drums How then can it be less a violation of the oath for any member to vote for an other member in the teeth of this plain provision? pleasure and perhaps the duty of appearing before you this evening to the fact that my name has been associated with the high office of United States senstor from Georgia, to be filled soon by this body. It seems to have been the custom for some time past that citizens of Georgia about to occupy that relation to the general assembly shall on fitting occasions address that body. It so happens that I never have had the pleasure of being present on any such occasion, and whether that custom would be "more honored in the breach than the observance," I will not stop to inquire, since the kindness of quite a number of your body has furnished me this opportunity by their earnest invitation.

Gentlemen, the duty devolves upon you of selecting a senstor from the state of Georgia. Upon you by the constitution of the United States—upon the I gislature of the state—that duty devolves. The power is there, the responsibility is there, and it cannot be shifted or divided it is there under the constitution of the United States, which, under your oaths you obey; by the relation of the state to the United States, and the obligation to obey It is, therefore, fitting that this address should be made to the constitutional electors of senators because there the duty and there the responsibility rests, and nowhere else I am not here to proclaim my special fitness for this office. It is not the personal rit hof any man to fill the office. No man has a divine right, a prascriptive right, an acquired right, to fill that office for his own personal benefit. No man has a right to ask that he be permitted to fill it on secount of any presonal benefit for him by any member of the legislature, who is one of the constitutional electors. He must be the representative of the state of Georgia sent there under the terms of the constitution; and whoever is most fit, in theff estimation, to fill that office provides and political acts and history of a very prominent citizen of the state of Georgia from the provides of the provides of the provides o

He holding office under a republican dynasty, left that office to benefit nis own affairs, which resulted most successfully.

There was no place left then for a republican. The interest of the state of Georgia had passed into the hands of her own people, who had the education and the property to control them. Not until then he ceased to be a republican—and whether republicans have any present or pleasing r. collections of the meanner and time in which he deserted them. I leave them to decide! Certain it is he did not hold on to them any long; er when they were in trouble than he dd to us when we were in trouble. Laughter and cheers! If they like such friendship I commend it to them, but we warm to moe of it. [Applanse]

At that time all discussion with reference to Governor Brown ceased. He was engaged in the pursuit of his comquest of wealth, an. It was not proper to criticise him further. He claiming and the "saggenty" to see the conquerer would not help it, and therefore he was ready to accept them at one. Take that proposition in any sense, and see where it will lead us. Some man saw before the struggle began that the enemy would be too powerful for us, and the best thing to do would be not to assist his own people. He said to himself: "It is not best to sit and sulk in my tent, and do nothing to assist them until they find out the truth, but it is best that they should find it out quickly. I will go over to the enemy and help to whip my people at once." [Applanse].

It is the argument of the strong always used agai, st the weak. It would do away with all that history has told us of what the faith and fortitude of humanity can do, even when the resources for success are not ample and obvious. It would not away from the proper to the enemy and help to whip my people at once." [Applanse] "I would do away with all that history has told us of what the faith and not not ry stall. An article published in a gazeute of this city this morning, without being at all offensive, made reference to the geographical qualification of a senator, and intimates that if one were elected from Chatham county, even one whom the writer was kind enough to mention in complimentary terms, he would be the senator of "Chatham county" only. Now I ask any who have ever served with men from Chatham. In the legislature or elewhere, if that is not a slander? If they have ever insisted upon legislation for their const uents to the detriment or exclusion of other sections of Georgis?
